NATIONAL CEMETERY ON MEMORIAL DAY

The scene of activities, showing graves of the Civil War dead decorated in memory of the ideals for which they laid down their lives.

Town Pays Annual Tribute To Living and Dead of Great Civil War on Memorial Day

Congressman W. D. Upshaw, A Son Of The South, Pleads For An Unselfish, Reverent, Sober, Loyal And God-Fearing Americanism, In Annual Memorial Day Address In National Cemetery.

Gettysburg today again paid unstinted tribute to the honored living and the immortal dead of the Civil War in annual Memorial Day exercises.

Old Glory, flung from many masts, rode proudly on a stiff breeze, which sprang up over night, and, much to the surprise of everyone, turned Memorial Day into a day of benign sunshine, deep blue skies, over which white patches of clouds chased, and early dispelled any indication of rain or of threatening weather.

Marching hundreds, many of them school children, carrying their tokens of cut flowers, which they later scattered over the graves of known and unknown hundreds in the National Cemetery; martial music, which furnished the cadence for the marchers and caused the hearts of spectators along the route of the parade to beat just a little faster; soldiers of three wars, some old and tottery, riding in automobiles, others young and vigorous, on foot; a speaker of national prominence, born and reared in the South, but eager to speak at Memorial Day exercises on a field hallowed by the blood of his ancestors—this was the setting for Decoration Day this year.

After twenty some days of rainy, threatening weather, the bright sun seemed a thousand times brighter, and served as an excellent tonic for persons who contemplated coming to Gettysburg for the day. The early morning crowd was about up to normal, observers said, and as the time for the parade and exercises at the National Cemetery drew near the first-comers were augmented by hundreds of others, making the day one of the most memorable in recent years.

In addition to the hundreds of visitors who flocked to Gettysburg today by automobile, two excursions over the Western Maryland railroad added a large contingent of pedestrians. Police were stationed at every corner directing traffic and no accidents were reported before the parade got under way.

After the parade and the customary exercises of the Corporal Skelly G. A. R. post in the National Cemetery, the oration of the day was given from the rostrum in the burying grounds by Congressman William David Upshaw, of Atlanta, Georgia, a true son of the South.

Congressman Upshaw, who is also candidate for the Democratic nomination as vice president of the United States, is a fluent speaker and held the attention of the large crowd gathered before the rostrum.

"We can only meet and solve the vexing problems of these testing times by an Americanism that is unselfish, that is loyal, that is sober, is reverent and God-fearing," he declared in the course of his address in which he combined praise for the forces of Ulysses S. Grant and those of Robert E. Lee, the two great opposing commanders in the Battle of Gettysburg.

In part, Congressman Upshaw spoke as follows:

"Fresh from the impact of patriotic scenes and legislative activities in the nation's capital, which has given a positive elixir of spirit for such an hour as this, I bring to this high and holy task a heart that is responsive, I hope, to every tide of inspiration which any loyal American must feel in the memorial atmosphere of historic Gettysburg.

"But, significant as your memorial exercises always are on the 30th of May, it is surely without controversy that this hour carries a lesson of national fellowship which is rich with international inspiration.

"In other lands that have been torn by internal strife, bitterness lives and blights for generations after the cannons have been spiked and the smoke of battle has cleared away; but here in our beloved country, where the measureless triumphs of our Christian civilization fashion the regnant ideals of our once riven land, we see the son of a Confederate soldier invited by a Post of the Grand Army of the Republic to speak the message of fellowship on our National Memorial Day.

"It is only in the reciprocal recognition of genuine Americanism on both sides that we can hope to build for the present and for the future that temple of perfect National fellowship in which the Nation we love can victoriously endure. This temple of faith, my fellow Americans, can not grow into perfect symmetry and power as long as one side holds the other side at a distance in a spirit of espionage and distrust. It can never come, if you please, as long as the South calls a northerner a 'blank Yankee' and the North calls a son of the South a 'blank rebel,' or a 'blank traitor.' We might as well recognize that fact in the beginning of this memorial hour and carry it away with us as a newly treasured heritage from this spot of deathless memories, for that is my theme, ladies and gentlemen—'Our National Heritage in Gettysburg and Appomattox.'

Have A Common Purpose

"It may be a new doctrine to many, but it will be the undimmed basis of our perfect understanding if we remind each other that the cause which led to the unhappy war of the 60's was a sense of constitutional loyalty on both sides of the line that divided the North and the South. When this fact is once established, dishonoring and tantalizing epithets will be forever lost words in our American vocabulary, and we will agree with President Coolidge at the Confederate memorial service yonder at Arlington last Sunday when he declared, 'They were all Americans—all contending for what they believed were their rights.'

Harding's Declaration

"Side by side with this ringing declaration of President Coolidge, I placed that immortal sentence of his lamented predecessor.

"For more than half a hundred years the hungry heart of the misunderstood South had waited for those honest, beautiful words of President Warren G. Harding when, speaking at the dedication of the Lincoln Memorial, he frankly said:

"'There were ambiguities in the Constitution that could only be wiped out by a baptism of blood.'

South Always Willing

"It was easy to find the names of Confederate soldiers when we wanted to sell Liberty Bonds; it was easy enough to find the names of Confederate soldiers and their widows when we wanted to raise the revenues of war; it was easy enough to find their happy hearthstones when our Government wanted to find soldiers to fight side by side with your own brave boys for the safety of America and the freedom of mankind—then why, in God's name—why, in the name of the priceless glory of our common travail and our common triumphs, should it not be easy to find their names upon the pension rolls of the land they love so well? Not because they will suffer for life's necessities if this government does not give this practical recognition, but because, as God is my witness—supremely for our country's sake. I would despise myself if I had allowed any sectional spirit to keep me from voting for each increase in pensions proposed since I have been in Congress for the battle-scarred soldiers in Blue as they totter toward their honored graves.

"I want to see the sons and daughters of all the soldiers of the North and the South look at our flag through eyes of equal love—then look at each other through joyous tears and see such a beautiful, deathless illustration of sectional prejudice lost forever in a glorious rainbow of enduring national brotherhood. We want the nations of earth, who honor our flag as never before, to look across land and sea and behold a Nation, once grappling in fratricidal strife (because we blindly misunderstood), but now clasping hands in this blessed triumph of our Christian civilization. Surely if England can give a pension to the Boers who fought with Krueger and Botha in the South African War; if England can receive officially the monument of George Washington and place it in Trafalgar Square beside the statue of Nelson; if King George can come to a salute as Old Glory passes in review before Buckingham Palace, then surely, I say, this grateful Government can brighten the few declining years of the few remaining Confederate soldiers with this kiss of love and this hand clasp of national benediction.

Unselfish Americanism

"We can only meet and solve the vexing problems of these testing times by an Americanism that is unselfish—that is loyal—that is sober—that is reverent and God-fearing. Self on the Cross and Christ on the Throne in every human heart is the hope of both church and state. Loyalty to the Flag is essential to the authority of the Flag—for 'there is no place beneath the American flag for the heart that does not love it and the arm that will not defend it.'

"It is ours to illustrate by voice and vote, by precept and practice, through the highest officials and the

1924 CLASS TO HOLD REUNION

Gettysburg College Graduates Returning in June For 20th Anniversary.

Members of the class of 1904, at Gettysburg College, are planning to return to Gettysburg in June this year, when they will hold their 20th anniversary reunion. Among the members of the class who reside in Adams county are Dr. A. R. Wentz, of the Seminary faculty; Norton C. Miller and Henry R. Garlach, local mail carriers; Mrs. James L. Bigham, who lives a few miles west of town; and Arthur E. Rice, of Biglerville.

Their names are prominent in the 21st annual issue of the 1904 Bulletin, a 70-page book which has just come from the press. This Bulletin is unique in college literature. It has been published for 21 consecutive years by the Gettysburg Class of 1904,—a record perhaps not equalled by any class organization in any other college of the United States. The bulletin contains numerous illustrations and a spicy letter or message from nearly every one of the 63 members of the class, who are scattered in 50 cities thoughout 13 States and the District of Columbia. The present editor is a Government worker in Washington, D. C., and as a matter of historical interest he advises that Gettysburg College (formerly Pennsylvania College) soon will celebrate its centennial.

Many of the Class of 1904 have risen to high positions in the professional and business world. Including both the graduate and non-graduate members, eleven are in the gospel ministry; eight are teachers in public schools or professors in higher institutions of learning; six are prominent in the legal profession; five are in the Government service, one of these being assistant chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, Department of Agriculture. Five of the "co-eds" are making happy homes for their successful husbands; four others are an inspiration and help to their husbands who are prominent preachers, and the remaining girl member is active in a business career. Two of the young men are high in the insurance world; two are leading physicians in their communities, and two others are in the coal business.

The following lines of service each engage the talents of one member of the Class of 1904: Legal member of one of the State industrial accident commissions; manager of a big city telephone exchange; traffic manager for one of the foremost automobile manufacturers; officer of a prominent public utilities company; owner and operator of a big brick-manufacturing plant; artist with a well-known New York advertising firm; head of a large produce concern. One member has long been connected with the Pennsylvania Railroad; one operates a big farm in New York State; another is a civil engineer; one a tailor; one in the cigar business; another a hardware merchant. Wholesale groceries; building supplies; store supplies, and the creamery business occupy the attention of the four other members.

HANOVER VIOLIN CONCERT TO ATTRACT GETTYSBURGIANS

A large number of Gettysburg people are planning to hear Gray-Lhevinne, who will appear in Hanover Opera House, June 3rd. She is reputed to be America's best woman violinist and some critics give her first place among the world's woman violinists. This concert will be given under the management of the Kiwanis Club and the proceeds will be used for under-privileged-child-work.

She tells the story of each piece before she plays it. The violin she uses is the Cremona of 1715 and is the same violin used by Mozart as a child; Donizetti worked out the airs of many of his eighty operas including the beloved "Lucia" upon this same violin, it is said.

BOOST STANDARDS OF SCHOLARSHIP

New Rules Adopted at Gettysburg College Are Step Forward, It Is Said.

Standards of scholarship at Gettysburg College were given another boost with the adoption by the faculty of a new set of rules governing class standing of the students.

The new rules governing standing of the students, as passed by the faculty, follow:

"Any student receiving a failing grade (F) in three courses must leave College.

"Any student receiving a failing grade (F) in two courses shall leave unless he can satisfactorily explain the grades, as by sickness, etc.

"Any student receiving a conditional grade (E) in four subjects shall be instructed to withdraw.

"At the end of each semester, those students will be dropped whose general average is only a D.

"There will be an accounting at the end of each month. Those students who are failing in any subject will be called before the committee on scholastic standing, and will be put on probation, and if they do not make good by the end of the next month they shall be asked to withdraw from College."

"These standards put Gettysburg College just a little ahead of the colleges of the State that have the best reputations for scholarship, and even ahead of some of the best New England schools," one member of the faculty said this morning, in making public the action of the faculty.

SCHOOL WRANGLE BROUGHT TO HEAD

Reading of Recommendation at Commencement Exercises Precipitates Action.

A controversy in the public schools of Biglerville over the retirement of Conrad C. Muehe as supervising principal was brought to a head at the commencement exercises Tuesday evening when, just before the benediction was pronounced, Professor Muehe read a strong recommendation of himself and his ability as a school supervisor, signed by John H. Seasely, president of the Biglerville school board, and Willis H. Lady, school board secretary.

Mr. Seasely was actively opposed to Mr. Muehe's retention and led to the opposition to him, it is said. Despite his opposition to Mr. Muehe as head of the Biglerville schools, he signed the recommendation, he said, because he felt that "while Mr. Muehe had outlived his usefulness to the schools in Biglerville" he believed Mr. Muehe could go into another community and obtain desired results. In this, he acquiesed in the opinion of other members of the board, Mr. Seasely said. Mr. Muehe also holds a second recommendation signed by the other three members of the Biglerville board, Dr. M. T. Dill, U. S. Kleinfelter and George H. Knouse, praising his ability and setting forth his record of accomplishments for the Biglerville schools. However, he did not read this recommendation at commencement.

In reading the recommendation before the commencement audience at the close of the exercises, Mr. Muehe did not make clear all the facts in the case pertaining to the recommendation and the manner in which it was given to him by Mr. Seasely and Mr. Lady, Mr. Seasely says. And no opportunity was given him to explain the facts to the audience, Mr. Seasely further contends.

Counter petitions have been circulated in Biglerville in connection with hte controversy, the two petitions being signed by a total of several hundred patrons of the schools, it is said.

46 Seniors Are Graduated At High School Commencement

Dr. Thomas L. Cline, Of The College, Gives Able and Forceful Address Before Large Audience; Papers Of Valedictorian And Salutatorian Show Careful Preparation.

Forty-six young men and young women this morning stood at the forks of the road. They were the same, who on Thursday evening were graduated from the Gettysburg High School at commencement exercises at Brua Chapel.

The decision they are now called upon to make, whether to continue with higher education, or to go into business, with their grade and high school education complete, was the mythical forks of the road before which each is halted.

Brua Chapel was without a vacant seat during the exercises, which found great favor with the large crowd of parents, teachers, members of the board of education and friends, who witnessed the annual graduation ceremonies. In fact, many in the audience were heard to say that the commencement exercises this year were the best ever witnessed.

Dr. Cline Is Speaker

Dr. Thomas L. Cline, of the English department at Gettysburg College, was the commencement speaker, and he wished for the Seniors "strength to carry on with a strong, clean body, a virile and a fruitful mind and a definite aim and purpose in life."

In the course of his able and forceful address, Dr. Cline cited the lives of the great Jonathan Edwards and Aaron Burr, his grandson, as examples of the best and worst, highest and lowest, in men, and as representing the difference between success and failure.

Part of his address was directed at the parents of the young men and young women about to be graduated, and he asked them whether the boys and girls on the platform represented in some definite degree their ideas of what they had planned to make of their children. The speaker declared that if the boys and girls filled the expectations of the parents, they were to be congratulated. Playmates, community life and teachers, Dr Cline said, played a large part in the development of the characters of the young men and young women on the platform.

The addresses of Miss Dorothy Kime, valedictorian, and Miss Pearl Gardner, salutatorian, were capable and gave evidence of careful preparation, as did also the oration of Winfield Horner, who spoke on "The Greatest State Paper."

The program for the evening was varied, with music and the presentation of gifts pleasing features. Many persons in the audience were heard to remark that the presentations this year were filled with more genuine wit and humor than ever before. The donors were Dorothy Remmel, Viola Cromer, Harmon Zinn and Edgar Markley.

Prizes Are Awarded

Mrs. J. P. Bigham, regent of the Gettysburg chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, presented the two prizes of $5 and $2.50 to Miss Geraldine Epley and Miss Mary Rife, respective winners this year of the essay writing contest conducted annually by the D. A. R. chapter.

The alumni prizes for scholarship attainments were presented by William G. Weaver, recent president of the alumni association of the High School. Miss Dorothy Kime was the recipient of $5 and Miss Pearl Gardner $2.50 from the alumni association, for attaining the two highest averages in their class

Allen B. Plank, president of the board of education, presented diplomas to the capped and gowned Seniors. As the members of the class passed by, the male members of the class baring their heads to receive the certificates, all changed the tassels of their mortars from the right to the left side in approved collegiate style.

The class poem, composed and recited by Robert Bream, brought forth favorable comment on all sides. The class song, "Dear G. H. S. Adieu," composed by Raymond Wisler, of the class, was another feature of the evening

Rev. W. C. Robinson, pastor of the Gettysburg Presbyterian church, gave the invocation and pronounced the benediction.

Musical Numbers Please

Musical numbers during the evening consisted of selections by the High School orchestra, "Greetings to Spring," the Senior chorus; "Happy Days," solo, Jarvis Robinson; "Narcissus," double quintet, Misses Geraldine Epley, Geraldine Cashman, Elizabeth Bigham, Dorothy Remmel, Martha Bowers, Majorie Slaybaugh, Elizabeth Seabrook, Kathryn Weikert, Ruth Reaser and Mildred Cashman, with a violin obligato by Paul Reaser; selections by a double quartet; and the class song.

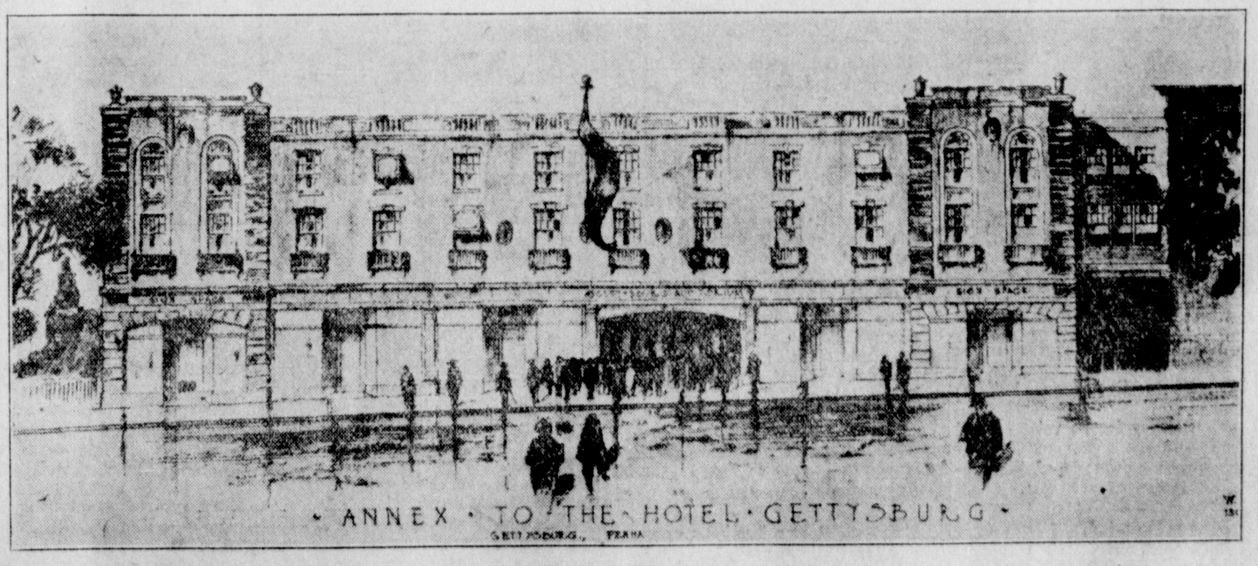
Addition to Hotel Gettysburg As It Will Look When Completed



This drawing by the architect shows how the proposed addition to Hotel Gettysburg will look when completed. The building will be connected across the alley with the present Hotel Gettysburg building and will extend down Carlisle street from the alley in the rear of the present structure to the Western Maryland railway station. The first floor will contain an auditorium and ball room, which will seat approximately 1,500 persons. This will fill a much-needed want in Gettysburg and enable the town to obtain conventions and the like which it has been necessary to forego in the past because of a lack of proper facilities to house the delegates. Besides the auditorium lobby, the first floor will contain five store rooms fronting on Carlisle street. The second and third floors will comprise from 50 to 60 hotel rooms, each an outside room and each with private bath and private telephone connections.

As previously announced in The Times, the Hotel management plans to commence construction work late this summer and have the building under roof by the time inclement weather sets in so that the interior can be completed during the winter and be ready for occupancy next spring.

Every five years the Class returns to Gettysburg for a big reunion. Arrangements have been made for a 20th anniversary celebration, with a banquet at the Hotel Gettysburg on June 10. Many of the members will bring their wives and children, so that a large gathering is expected this year. Altogether, there are nearly 100 children in the second generation of this Class. In the 20 years since graduation, only five members have died. One of those was an officer of high rank in the U. S. Navy.

Among those who have already signified their intentions to attend the 1904 reunion are: Adie E. Black, Altoona; John B. Boyer, Chicago; Prof. Samuel A. Conway, Elizabethtown; Mrs. Roy C. Dougherty, Reading; Dr. Paul B. Dunbar, Washington; Paul Froehlich, Washington; Rev. J. W. Gentzler, Trenton; C. B. Gladfelter, Athens, N. Y.; Rev. Paul Gladfelter, Abbottstown; Lyman A. SCHOOL WRANGLE BROUGHT TO HEAD

Mr. Muehe did not make application for re-election to the position of supervising principal and "as far back as February 20, before the matter of selecting teachers and executives for the schools next year came before the board," he had signed a contract for special work of a different character with a firm in Syracuse, New York, he states.

Statement by Mr. Seasely

In connection with the controversy, Mr. Seasely gave the Gettysburg Times the following statement:

"In reference to the recommendation of C. C. Muehe, Supervising Principal of the Biglerville borough schools, signed by me as president and Willis H. Lady, secretary, the facts which the general public should know so as to base their conclusion on the merits of the controversy are these:

"In a meeting of the board after the passing of the two petitions before the board, U. S. Kleinfelter and G. H. Knouse made a plea in behalf of C. C. Muehe, and besought the president and secretary to join in a letter of recommendation stating that the said C. C. Muehe had a position in view and needed a letter of commendation from the board. This request was acquiesced in immediately for the purpose of creating harmony in and among the members of the board.

"After a lapse of a few days, G. H. Knouse, the emissary of C. C. Muehe, handed a typewritten document to Mr. Lady and myself. Since we agreed to sign a recommendation, on the conditions that the contents be not used in propaganda and retaliation which promise was made by G. H. Knouse, we affixed our signatures. I told Mr. Knouse that if he should disregard the promise I would repudiate my signature to the document, as the motive in signing it was solely to aid the principal in securing a position.

"C. C. Muehe, taking advantage of this condition of affairs, read this paper during his closing remarks, much to the disadvantage of the parties concerned.

"If C. C. Muehe was no candidate for re-election, why did he so zealously vindicate his position at such a time when it was unsafe to make a diversion?

"Let us be fair and just and give the whole truth to the public and let them decide who did the fair thing."

Prof. Muehe's Reply

Mr. Muehe said he had no reply to make to Mr. Seasely and no desire to discuss the matter further. He gave The Times the following brief statement:

"The communication of Mr. John H. Seasely, which you so kindly informed me of before publication, evokes no comment from me. It simply illustrates forcibly to the general public the true character of the man. Trying to extricate himself from an extremely unpleasant position, he involves himself more deeply."

After several special and regular meetings, the school board of Biglerville unanimously elected the following corps of teachers:

Supervisory principal, Professor C. L. Raffensberger, an alumnus of Albright College, being an honor man, and a member of the intercollegiate debating club and at present a student of University of Pennsylvania, where he is pursuing the prescribed couse for the M. A. degree. Professor Raffensberger is an honor graduate of C. V. S. N. School, where he was head of Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., later teaching mathametics at Ardmore and New Bloomsfield.

Leslie Stock was elected vice-principal. He is a graduate of C. V. S. N. School. Mr. Stock was retained at an increase of salary in competition of his election by the Gettysburg School Board. He has given universal satisfaction as teacher of science and athletic coach and in turning out the best team in basketball in the history of the schools. He has pursued work in Gettysburg College during the last two years.

Mrs. Eva Deardorff Bowers, A. B., was elected teacher of languages. She is an alumnus of Gettysburg College and has taught in the Biglerville High School for six consecutive years with marked efficiency.

Miss Ida Olmsted is retained as the commercial instructor. She is a former student at Susquehanna University. Her work in stenography and typewrting has been capable.

Miss Reida Longenecker was elected teacher of English and supervisor teacher of music. She is a graduate of C. V. S. N. School and at present she is teaching at Williamsburg. She comes highly recommended as a strong and methodical teacher.

Miss Esta Slaybaugh is retained for the fifth consecutive year as teacher of history and subjects in the seventh and eighth grades. She is a graduate of the C. V. S. N. School and has taken work at Gettysburg College.

Miss Maud Pensyl, Biglerville, will assume charge of the fifth and sixth grades. She holds a permanent state certificate, and comes as a thorough disciplinarian.

Miss Esta Bream has been retained in third and fourth grades. She is a graduate of C. V. S. N. School. Miss Bream has been growing in teacher ability, which has been rewarded by the School Board by an increase in salary.

Miss Kathyrine Daniels, of Gettysburg, was elected teacher of first and second grades. She is a graduate of the C. V. S. N. School and has been teaching at Williamsburg the last two years. She comes highly recommended for primary work.

The school tax remains the same as last year.

TO FORCE ACTION ON FARM RELIEF

Radicals in House Seek to Prevent Adjournment Unless Aid is Given.

BILL APPEARS DOOMED

In Case of Failure of McNary-Haugen Bill, Minority Will Put Forth Its Own Agrarian Measure.

Washington, May 30.—After a day of rather fruitless conferences leaders of both branches of Congress were unable to predict Thursday night whether Congress will be able to adjourn on June 7 or whether farm relief legislation will be enacted. The chances were decidedly against the McNary-Haugen farm bill, now nearing a vote in the House, and members of the farm bloc in the Senate said if that measure is rejected the upper chamber will not know where to turn.

Representative Longworth, of Ohio, floor leader of the House, and Chairman Snell, of the Rules Committee, came over to the Senate Thursday to inform Senator Lodge and Senator Curtis that the McNary-Haugen bill faced defeat in the lower body. They conferred at length regarding a compromise measure, but reached no conclusion.

Simultaneously Democratic leaders of the Senate were holding an informal caucus in the cloakroom to map out a party program covering farm legislation and also adjournment. It virtually has been decided that if the McNary-Haugen bill fails in the House the minority will put forward its own bill, which may be the Smith measure for a broadening of the cooperative marketing system through greater utilization of Federal Reserve credits, or the Stanley bill to exchange American farm products for the finished manufactured products of Europe, cutting the tariff duty on the latter by one-half.

While the regulars of the two parties mulled over their legislative record the radical members of the House, led by Representatve Nelson, of Wisconsin, started the circulation of a pledge binding members not to consent to adjournment on June 7 unless, meanwhile, an agricultural credits law shall have been enacted. It was said that a series of Progressive conferences would begin and the La Follette group, probably reinforced by a few farm bloc members of both parties, would set faces against an early adjournment. The fate of farm legislation, as well as adjournment, is believed to hinge largely on the attitude that Senator La Follette will take when he returns to Washington next week.

Divided On Adjournment

"If La Follette comes back here," a Democratic strategist said, "and makes a rip-snorting speech daring Congress to adjourn without doing something for the farmer or amending the Esch-Cummins Railroad act, it will scare both sides nearly to death, and adjournment plans may go glimmering."

NEW LIFE GIVEN BOY SCOUT MOVE

Troops One and Two Being Reorganized; Rotary and Lions' Clubs Offer Aid.

Reorganization of Troop One and Troop Two of the Gettysburg Boy Scouts is now in progress, it is announced by A. B. Plank, one of the Scout Councillors.

W. C. Neely, formerly a local school teacher and now connected with the Gettysburg National bank, is the new Scoutmaster of Troop One, with Rev. W. C. Robinson, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, as assistant.

Howard Armor, of the automobile agency firm of Markley, Plank and Company, and commander of a Harrisburg company of the Pennsylvania National Guard, is Scoutmaster of Troop Two, with his brother, Brady Armor, a senior at Gettysburg College, as assistant.

An organization meeting will be held on Monday evening at 7.30 at the store of A. B. Plank, Baltimore street, to be attended by the committees of the two troops and the Scoutmasters, at which time a date will be set for general meetings of the two troops when applications for membership will be received and acted upon.

Troop Three of the local Scouts is headed by Clyde Bream as Scoutmaster, and is actively functioning. Troops One and Two, as previously organized, recently disbanded.

Renewed interest on the part of the Rotary and Lions' clubs in boys work has been incentive toward the reorganization of Troops One and Two, it is pointed out. Plans of these two organizations of business men, originally launched by the oldest of the two, the Rotary Club, include the erection of a permanent club house for the Scouts in the near future. Both the Rotarians and the Lions have appointed special committees to aid the Scouts in every way possible.

Both Troops One and Two, when reorganized fully, will hold their meetings in the social rooms of the Presbyterian Church, the Rev. Mr. Robinson and the trustees of the church offering the social rooms to the Scouts for that purpose.

IDEAS INADMISSABLE

Case Is Presented Against William M. Brown, Former Bishop of Church, Charged With Heresy.

Cleveland, May 30.—The whole body of doctrine of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America was called into evidence Thursday in the trial here of Bishop William M. Brown, accused of teachings outside that doctrine.

The trial court of eight bishops ruled that the doctrine of the church is contained in the Book of Common Prayer and, in accordance with that decision, the case against the accused bishop was presented in half an hour. Bishop Joseph M. Francis, of Indianapolis, was the sole witness and he was called only to establish the office of the defendant and to identify the book upon which the accusation is based.

Then the defense moved to dismiss on the ground of insufficient evidence and the case settled back into the argumentative stage from which it had scarcely emerged.

In defining the source of church doctrine, the court also ruled against the effort of the defense to get depositions from all bishops of the church. After stating that it would be useless to obtain such testimony unless it would be admissable as evidence, when produced in court, the decision said:

"The defendant says that he would seek to prove what the doctrine of this church is by the opinion of the proposed witness and also to produce the opinion of said witnesses as to whether some of the alleged utterances of the defendant are contrary to the doctrine and where the doctrine of this church is to be found.

"This court is a canonical court, charged with the duty of ascertaining whether a bishop charged with holding and teaching publicly or privately and advisedly doctrine contrary to that held by this church is guilty or not guilty.

"What the doctrine of the church is in any particular and whether the utterances of the defendant contravene it are not to be determined by the opinions of witnesses.

"The duty to make that determination has been imposed upon this court for this trial and they cannot avoid it.

"The doctrine of the church is fixed by the whole church acting in its corporate capacity and not by the individual opinions or interpretations placed upon any document, supposed to contain the church's doctrine, by any bishop, priest or deacon, speaking individually."

Book Of Common Prayer As Guide

The decision went on to announce the court's determination to take judicial notice of what it considered church doctrine, said wide latitude would be allowed counsel in suggesting what such a decision might be, and added:

"The question has been asked by counsel as to where this doctrine may be found. The court expresses the opinion that such doctrine is to be found in the Book of Common Prayer as adopted and established by the constitution of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America."

Town Pays Annual Tribute To Soldiers Living And Dead

humblest citizen the integrity of our Constitution, the majesty of our laws and that personal and national righteousness which alone exalteth a nation! It was for such a nation that heroes fought and fell. Verily—'who seem to die in such a cause—we can not call them dead.' They live as Kosciuszko lives: they live as Robert Bruce and William Wallace live; they live as Cromwell and Washington, Garibaldi and Savonarola lift their heads above the Ages as the restless years roll on.

Lincoln's Challenge Calls

"Lincoln's immortal declaration constitutes America's sacred challenge today. This is the heritage bequeathed to your generation and all the generations that are to follow. America must, under God, fulfill, as Ben Hill said, 'her high and expected destiny,' not only for her own sake, but for the sake of the watching world. If, as Emerson said, 'America is God's last, best national effort in behalf of the human race,' let every memory of Gettysburg and Appomattox wake our souls as God's last trump shall wake the dead. The tramp of two million sons of Blue and Gray on the battle front of the world was the startling, compelling answer to that military autocracy that threatened the freedom of mankind. Two millions more of eager reserves were ready to go, while countless other millions of American men and women and billions of American wealth stood tiptoe and impatient to be dedicated to the supreme task of answering the call of destiny.

"Ah, this Gettysburg memorial means that we will not forget. The holy inspiration of the call of Flanders Field is burning in our hearts and leaping to flame upon our lips!

"'To you from falling hands we throw the torch—
Be yours to hold it high.'"

The Edelweiss.

The Edelweiss is an Alpine perennial woolly plant of the Composite family, found in Switzerland, the Tirol, Carinthia, Alpine Austria, and Siberia. It bears heads of flowers surrounded by woolly bracts and sage-green leaves. It is famous, not for its beauty, but for its scarcity and the difficulty of obtaining it in its elevated haunts. It is so rare in Switzerland that several cantons protect it by law. It is readily cultivated in gardens in America and Europe. In Swiss poetry and legend it plays a prominent part.

"You're dotty, Francis," his friend declared shortly.

"I told you I was crazy," was the desperate reply. "So would you be if you'd sat opposite that woman for half an hour, and heard her story."

"What woman?" Wilmore demanded, leaning forward in his chair and gazing at his friend with increasing uneasiness.

"A woman who met me outside the court and told me the story of Oliver Hilditch's life."

"A stranger?"

"A complete stranger to me. It transpired that she was his wife."

Wilmore lit a cigarette.

"Believe her?"

"There are times when one doesn't believe or disbelieve," Francis answered. "One knows."

Wilmore nodded.

"All the same, you're crazy," he declared. "Even if you did save the fellow from the gallows, you were only doing your job, doing your duty to the best of your ability. You had no reason to believe him guilty."

"That's just as it happened," Francis pointed out. "I really didn't care at the time whether he was or not. I had to proceed on the assumption that he was not, of course, but on the other hand I should have fought just as hard for him if I had known him to be guilty."

"And you wouldn't now—tomorrow, say?"

"Never again."

"Because of that woman's story?"

"Because of the woman."

There was a short silence. Then Wilmore asked a very obvious question.

"What sort of person was she?"

Francis Ledsam was silent several moments before he replied. The question was one which he had been expecting, one which he had already asked himself many times, yet he was unprepared with any definite reply.

"I wish I could answer you, Andrew," his friend confessed. "As a matter of fact, I can't. I can only speak of the impression she left upon me, and you are about the only person breathing to whom I could speak of that."

Wilmore nodded sympathetically. He knew that, man of the world though Francis Ledsam appeared, he was nevertheless a highly imaginative person, something of an idealist as regards women, unwilling as a rule to discuss them, keeping them, in a general way, outside his daily life.

"Go ahead, old fellow," he invited. "You know I understand."

"She left the impression upon me," Francis continued quietly, "of a woman who had ceased to live. She was young, she was beautiful, she had all the gifts—culture, poise and breeding—but she had ceased to live. We sat with a marble table between us, and a few feet of oil-covered floor. Those few feet, Andrew, were like an impassable gulf. She spoke from the shores of another world. I listened and answered, spoke and listened again. And when she told her story, she went. I can't shake off the effect she had upon me, Andrew. I feel as though I had taken a step to the right or to the left over the edge of the world."

Andrew Wilmore studied his friend thoughtfully. He was full of sympathy and understanding. His one desire at that moment was not to make a mistake. He decided to leave unasked the obvious question.

"I know," he said simply. "Are you dining anywhere?"

"I thought of staying on here," was the indifferent reply.

"We won't do anything of the sort," Wilmore insisted. "There's scarcely a soul in tonight, and the place is too humpy for a man who's been seeing spooks. We'll go to Claridge's."

CHAPTER II

The two men occupied a table set against the wall. They were, in their way, an interesting contrast physically, neither of them good-looking, according to ordinary standards, but both with many pleasant characteristics. Andrew Wilmore, slight and dark, with sallow cheeks and brown eyes, looked very much what he was—a moderately successful journalist and writer of stories, a keen golfer, a bachelor who preferred a pipe to cigars, and lived at Richmond because he could not find a flat in London which he could afford, large enough for his somewhat expansive habits. Francis Ledsam was of a sturdier type, with features perhaps better known to the world owing to the constant activities of the cartoonist. His reputation during the last few years had carried him, notwithstanding his comparative youth—he was only thirty-five years of age—into the very front ranks of his profession, and his income was one of which men spoke with bated breath. He came from a family of landed proprietors, whose younger sons for generations had drifted always either to the bar or the law, and his name was well known in the purlieus of Lincoln's Inn before he himself had made it famous. He was a persistent refuser of invitations, and his acquaintances in the fashionable world were comparatively few. Yet every now and then he felt a mild interest in the people whom his companion assiduously pointed out to him.

Francis finally broke in on Andrew's chatter. "I know you're dying to talk about the Hilditch case, aren't you? Well, go ahead."

"I'm only interested in this last development," Wilmore confessed. "Of course, I read the newspaper reports. To tell you the truth, for a murder trial it seemed to me to rather lack color."

"It was a very simple and straightforward case," Francis said slowly. "Oliver Hilditch is the principal partner in an American financial company which has recently opened offices in the West End. He seems to have arrived in England about two years ago, to have taken a house in Hill street, and to have spent a great deal of money. A month or so ago, his partner from New York arrived in London, a man named Jordan of whom nothing was known. It has since transpired, however, that his journey to Europe was undertaken because he was unable to obtain certain figures relating to the business, from Hilditch. Oliver Hilditch met him at Southampton, traveled with him to London and found him a room at the Savoy. The next day the whole of the time seems to have been spent in the office, and it is certain from the evidence of the clerk, that some disagreement took place between the two men. They dined together, however, apparently on good terms, at the Cafe Royal, and parted in Regent street soon after ten. At twelve o'clock Jordan's body was picked up on the pavement in Hill street, within a few paces of Hilditch's door. He had been stabbed through the heart with some needle-like weapon, and was quite dead."

"Was there any vital cause of quarrel between them?" Wilmore inquired.

"Impossible to say," Francis replied. "The financial position of the company depends entirely upon the value of a large quantity of speculative bonds, but as there was only one clerk employed, it was impossible to get at any figures. Hilditch declared that Jordan had only a small share in the business, from which he had drawn a considerable income for years, and that he had not the slightest cause for complaint."

"What were Hilditch's movements that evening?" Wilmore asked.

"Not a soul seems to have seen him after he left Regent street," was the somewhat puzzled answer. "His own story was quite straightforward and has never been contradicted. He let himself into his house with a latchkey after his return from the Cafe Royal, drank a whisky and soda in the library, and went to bed before half-past eleven. The whole affair—"

Francis broke off abruptly in the middle of his sentence. He sat with his eyes fixed upon the door, silent and speechless.

"What in Heaven's name is the matter, old fellow?" Wilmore demanded, gazing at his companion in blank amazement.

The latter pulled himself together with an effort. The sight of the two new arrivals talking to Louis, the head waiter, on the threshold of the restaurant, seemed for the moment to have drawn every scrap of color from his cheeks. Nevertheless, his recovery was almost instantaneous.

"If you want to know any more," he said calmly, "you had better go and ask him to tell you the whole story himself. There he is."

"And the woman with him?" Wilmore exclaimed, under his breath.

"His wife!"

To reach their table, the one concerning which Francis and his friend had been speculating, the new arrivals, piloted by Louis, had to pass within a few feet of the two men. The woman, serene, coldly beautiful, dressed like a Frenchwoman in unrelieved black, with extraordinary attention to details, passed them by with a careless glance and subsided into the chair which Louis was holding. Her companion, however, as he recognized Francis, hesitated. His expression of somewhat austere gloom was lightened. A pleasant but tentative smile parted his lips. He ventured upon a salutation, half a nod, half a more formal bow, a salutation which Francis instinctively returned. Andrew Wilmore looked on with curiosity.

"So that is Oliver Hilditch?" he murmured.

"That is the man," Francis observed, "of whom last evening half the people in this restaurant were probably asking themselves whether or not he was guilty of murder. Tonight they will be wondering what he is going to order for dinner. It is a strange world."

"Strange, indeed," Wilmore assented. "This afternoon he was in the dock, with his fate in the balance—the condemned cell or a favored table at Claridge's. And your meeting! One can imagine him gripping your hands, with tears in his eyes, his voice broken with emotion, sobbing out his thanks. And instead you exchange polite bows. I would not have missed this situation for anything."

"Tradesman!" Francis scoffed. "One can guess already at the plot of your next novel."

"He has courage," Wilmore declared. "He has also a very beautiful companion. Were you serious, Francis, when you told me that that was his wife?"

"She herself was my informant," was the quiet reply.

Wilmore was puzzled.

"But she passed you just now without even a glance of recognition, and I thought you told me at the club this afternoon that all your knowledge of his evil ways came from her. Besides, she looks at least twenty years younger than he does."

"I can only tell you what I know, Andrew," he said, as he set down his empty glass. "The woman who is with him now is the woman who spoke to me outside the Old Bailey this afternoon. We went to a tea-shop together.

"I Have Never Listened to So Horrible a Recital in My Life."

She told me the story of his career. I have never listened to so horrible a recital in my life."

"And yet they are here together, dining tete-a-tete, on a night when it must have needed more than ordinary courage for either of them to have been seen in public at all," Wilmore pointed out.

"It is as astounding to me as it is to you," Francis confessed. "From the way she spoke, I should never have dreamed that they were living together."

"And from his appearance," Wilmore remarked, as he called the waiter to bring some cigarettes, "I should never have imagined that he was anything else save a high-principled, well-born, straightforward sort of chap. I never saw a less criminal type of face."

They each in turn glanced at the subject of their discussion. Oliver Hilditch's good looks had been the subject of many press comments during the last few days. They were certainly undeniable. His face was a little lined, but his hair was thick and brown. His features were regular, his forehead high and thoughtful, his mouth a trifle thin but straight and shapely. Francis gazed at him like a man entranced. The hours seemed to have slipped away. He was back in the tea-shop, listening to the woman who spoke of terrible things. He felt again his shivering abhorrence of her cold, clearly narrated story. Again he shrank from the horrors from which with merciless fingers she had stripped the coverings. He seemed to see once more the agony in her white face, to hear the eternal pain aching and throbbing in her monotonous tone. He rose suddenly to his feet.

"Andrew," he begged, "tell the fellow to bring the bill outside. We'll have our coffee and liqueurs there."

Wilmore acquiesced willingly enough, but even as they turned towards the door Francis realized what was in store for him. Oliver Hilditch had risen to his feet. With a courteous little gesture he intercepted the passerby. Francis found himself standing side by side with the man for whose life he had pleaded that afternoon, within a few feet of the woman whose terrible story seemed to have poisoned the very atmosphere he breathed, to have shown him a new horror in life, to have temporarily, at any rate, undermined every joy and ambition he possessed.

"Mr. Ledsam," Hilditch said, speaking with quiet dignity, "I hope that you will forgive the liberty I take in speaking to you here. I looked for you the moment I was free this afternoon, but found that you had left the court. I owe you my good name, probably my life. Thanks are poor things but they must be spoken."

"You owe me nothing at all," Francis replied, in a tone which even he found harsh. "I had a brief before me and a cause to plead. It was a chapter out of my daily work."

The executive committee of the Agriculture Extension Association met at the office of County Agent R. E. Grove, formerly of York Springs, now of Hancock, Maryland, was read and accepted. A. B. C. Williams, York Springs, was nominated and elected to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Grove's resignation. E. F. Strasbaugh was elected treasurer, which position Mr. Grove held. The following program as planned for the year 1924 was adopted. Urges All To Attend

The executive committee and county agent have been planning and looking forward to an Adams county tour to State College on Farmers' Day, June 12. On account of the continued wet weather and late season the committee now feels best to abandon plans for the Adams county tour. However, several members of the executive committee plan to go to the College for Farmers' Day. They urge all who can do so to make this trip. It would be necessary to leave Gettysburg not later than June 11, 12 o'clock, in order to get to State College by evening, when the big meeting has been scheduled, special talks, community singing and educational moving pictures. Frank P. Willits, Secretary of Agriculture, and Dr. John M. Thomas, President of the College, will talk at this meeting. Thursday, June 12, has been designated as Farmers' Day at the College and at least 2,000 farmers are expected to view the experimental work being done in crops and livestock. Thirty demonstrations and lectures have been arranged for various hours throughout the day, and the dairy judging contest, an hour devoted to field events, an auction sale of pure bred calves have been scheduled as added attractions.

Adams county is having a boys livestock judging team represented who hope to make their work during the day of the judging contests spell an Adams county day.

County Agent Underwood will make arrangements for lodging for those who notify him they will go before Saturday, June 7.

Don't your mother know that Cod Liver Oil will put pounds of good healthy flesh on your bones in just a few weeks?

Tell her every druggist has it in sugar-coated tablet form now so that you won't have to take the nasty, fishy-tasting oil that is apt to upset the stomach.

Tell her that McCoy's Cod Liver Oil Tablets are chock-full of vitamines and are the greatest flesh producers and health builders she can find.

One sickly, thin kid, aged 9, gained 12 pounds in 7 months.

"I spent $1,800 in 7 years treating with psysicians, some specialists costing me $10 a visit, only to at last say that nothing could be done for me, that I had cancer or ulsers of the stomach. I suffered awful pains in my stomach, but after taking a few doses of Mayr's Wonderful Remedy these all disappeared and for 3 years am feeling fine." Constipation is ruinous to children—keep yours healthy with Kellogg's Bran

Constipation undermines a child's health. It saps his energy and makes him listless. It can lead to more than 40 other serious diseases. Mothers should take immediate steps to remove, safely and surely, the dangerous poisons from his system.

Kellogg's Bran—because it is ALL bran—brings permanent relief. Nothing but ALL bran can be 100 per cent effective. That is why Kellogg's Bran, cooked and krumbled, is universally recommended by doctors. They know it brings results.

If eaten regularly, Kellogg's Bran is guaranteed to give permanent relief in the most chronic cases of constipation, or your grocer returns your money. Kellogg's Bran acts on the intestines exactly as nature acts. It sweeps and cleans and purifies them. It makes them function naturally and regularly. It allows you to discontinue forever the use of harmful, habit-forming drugs and pills.

Kellogg's Bran, cooked and krumbled, is a delightful surprise to the taste—particularly if one has tried ordinary unpalatable brans. Kellogg's Bran has a delicious, crisp, nut-like flavor—an exclusive flavor. It is most enjoyable with milk or cream, sprinkled over other cereals or cooked with hot cereals. Try it in bread, muffins, griddle cakes and other recipes given on every package.

Have your children eat it regularly—two tablespoonfuls daily—in chronic cases, with every meal. Kellogg's Bran is made at Battle Creek and sold at all grocers. It is served in individual packages by the leading hotels and clubs. Ask for it at your restaurant.

Inoculate For Typhoid

HAGERSTOWN—Inoculation against typhoid fever is being resorted to in Harper's Ferry to protect the citizens from an outbreak of the disease as a result of the recent flood when a great portion of the historic town was inundated. Residents of nearby places have also been inoculated. Huge quantities of lime have been scattered about the flooded sections, it was stated by a resident of the town, in an effort to prevent disease and much progress is being made in cleaning up the place. Great quantities of mud have been left in the little town. In places where the current had a fairly good sweep, fully a foot of muck and mire was left in the streets and on the sidewalks. Interiors of numerous homes and places of business were saturated and coated with slimy mud and it will likely be weeks before the properties are in good shape again. In part of the town where the water backed up and then gradually sifted out as the flood subsided, the mud is said to be much more than a foot deep.

Prisoners Are Recalled

HAGERSTOWN—The search for Jack Hart, escaped Maryland penitentiary lifer, by Mike Reese and Robert Ruby, Hagerstown youths, ended abruptly Wednesday, when they received orders from Col. Claude B. Sweezey, warden at the Maryland House of Correction, to return to finish their sentences. The appearance of Ruby and Reese at Hagerstown several weeks ago, months before their sentence expired, caused authorities to investigate. When they inquired of Baltimore officials why the pair was there, Governor Ritchie finally admitted that he had released the men upon recommendation of Col. Sweezey, who wanted them to go to Rattle Skin Ridge and find out whether reports that Hart was leader of a moonshine gang had any foundation. The release was only temporary, the governor admitted. Reese and Ruby, who are residents of Hagerstown, spent more than a week there, ostensibly seeking clues to the whereabouts of Hart. Their constant presence on the streets and other public places caused the comment which resulted in their recall.

Couple Held For Theft

HAGERSTOWN — An eighteen-year-old boy and girl were held as auto-jacks Wednesday night after having been found asleep in the automobile of Dr. A. P. Stauffer, which was stolen Tuesday night from in front of his home on South Potomac street, in a lane leading from the Cavetown 'pike. The couple are William Smith and Manzella Lenhart, of Valentine street. A farmer driving into his home on the 'pike Wednesday night found the car blocking the lane leading to his house. He tried unsuccessfully to awaken the occupants of the machine and being unable to do so returned to Police Headquarters and notified Justice Bower.

All these storms which, like impregnate clouds, hover o'er our heads will melt into fruitful showers of blessings on the people.

Just Folks. by Edgar A. Guest

"I FORGOT" AND "DIDN'T THINK"

Two excuses met one day, "I Forgot" and "Didn't Think"—
Met beside a country well, where they'd stopped to get a drink.
"Hello, brother," shouted one in a glum and dreary way,
"Haven't seen you for a time. How are things with you today?"

"Well," said Didn't Think, "I'm tired. I've been working day and night.
I get blamed for everything, nothing that I do is right;
Every blunderer on earth quicker than a cat can wink
Stands beside the wreck he's caused telling men 'I didn't think'."

"Yes, you get some blame, of course," then responded I Forgot,
"But you do not get it all—on my back there falls a lot.
I'm abused from day to day, I'm the handy man they call
Every time a blunder's made that should not occur at all.

"We're a sorry pair we are, Didn't Think and I Forgot, Run the world's excuss o'er, we're the poorest of the lot."
"Yes," said Didn't Think, "we are.
We're not worth our cost in breath,
Still the blunderers of the world keep on working us to death."

Bass Season Is Closed

FREDERICK—Bass fishing season in Frederick county in tributaries of the Potomac River will not open until July 1, according to an act of the last Legislature. An interpretation of the local fishing season is given by Reno S. Harp, attorney, in the following statement: "There has been a number of inquiries in reference to the recent act passed by the Legislature, Chapter 340, which opens the season on bass above tide water in this state, from July 1, to December 1, and which does not apply to the Potomac River proper above Little Falls. However, it does apply to all tributaries of said river. Article 39, Section 40, of the Code of Public General Laws of the State of Maryland, provides that it shall not be lawful for any person to catch or kill any black bass, green bass, rock bass, pike or pickerel, or walleyed pike (commonly known as salmon), between the 15th day of April and the 1st day of June of each year; nor catch or kill any of said species of fish at any other time during the year, save only with a rod, hook and line or dip-net. The words hook and line shall not include trot lines or outlines. This section is a compact made between Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia and makes it unlawful for any person to catch or kill any black bass, green bass, rock bass, pike or pickerel or walleyed pike between the 15th day of April and the 1st day of June of each year. It is therefore unlawful at this time and season of the year to fish in the Potomac River with a hook and line or outlines for the fish mentioned above. However, the season will open on June 1 for the Potomac River. For the tributaries for the Potomac River the season will open July 1."

Will Invite Industries

FREDERICK—Representatives of the outstanding and larger industries of Western Maryland will be invited to attend the next meeting of the Executive Council of the Western Maryland Chamber of Commerce, it was decided when the Council held a meeting in Frostburg on Monday. The object of the invitation is to get representatives of the various firms together to discuss matters of general interest to all manufacturers and business men. One of the matters taken up at Monday's meeting was the wider distribution of the Western Maryland organization's highway film, "Motoring Through Western Maryland," which depicts the scenic delights of travel over highways of western Maryland. In this connection the U. S. Chamber of Commerce is being asked to use a description of the film in its regular bulletin and the "American Motorist," a travel magazine, will also be asked to give a description of the film.

Dr. Hanson Was Speaker

WAYNESBORO—At the end of every rainbow is a pot of gold if you are patient enough to follow to the end, the sixty-five members of the graduating class of the Waynesboro High School were told on the occasion of the forty-second annual commencement exercises Tuesday evening. Dr. Henry W. A. Hanson, president fo Gettysburg College, was the speaker to the graduates on the subject, "The End of the Rainbow." The graduating class, largest in the history of the High School, did well in every number on their commencement program. All of the choruses were well selected and well sung. The program opened with invocation by Rev. E. L. Eslinger, pastor of the Methodist church, and was followed by a chorus by the class, (a) "Water Lilies" (Linders), and (b) "Marianna" (Loomis). Miss Elizabeth Mumma delivered the salutatory address. She welcomed the patrons and concluded her address with a well prepared essay on the "American Forests and the American" in which she emphasized the value of the forests and urged their protection. The salutatory address was followed by an oration by William Stover on the subject, "Truth Will Truimph."

Mammie Knepper Is Dead

Fourteen grandchildren and seventeen great-grandchildren are living. Mrs. Knepper was a member of the old order of German Baptist church since early youth. She was beloved by Mont Alto people where she was better known as Mammie Knepper. She resided all her life at their home a short distance south of the Mont Alto borough line and was born and raised near the same place. The funeral will be held Saturday morning at 10, leaving the home for Mount Zion church where services will be conducted by her pastors, Revs. Harry Benedict and William Hess. S. A. Citadel To Open

WAYNESBORO—Plans for the opening of the new Salvation Army citadel on South Church street have been completed by Captain William Hummer, who is in charge of the local work. Several hundred visitors from barracks in many towns near Waynesboro are expected to attend the opening. The services will be held three days, beginning on Memorial Day at 10 in the morning and ending on Sunday evening. The session Friday evening will include a conference of the young people's council. The meeting at 10 in the morning and at 2:30 in the afternoon will be principally for teachers of the Salvation Army Sunday School classes. These meetings will be in charge of Brigadier and Mrs. Underwood, of New York City, who will also preside at the evening session at 8. The public is invited to attend this session.

IT PAYS TO TEST ALL SEEDS

By Bert Ball.
[National Crop Improvement Service.]

WHEN SEEDS fail to come up it is usually too late to replant. Take an ordinary blotter. Divide it into thirds. Wet it. Count 100 seeds into center third. Fold over end thirds, covering the seeds. Tear a strip of cloth like a wick. Hang it out of bottom of fold. Wrap any number of tests in waxed paper, leaving ends open; hang ends of all wicks in glass of water.

After five or six days open up test and count seeds which have strong root and shoot. If sample does not germinate 95 per cent you had better get better seed if you can as planting more seed will not make up the loss.

Neighbors

Many a housewife locks the front door out of habit—then hangs the key in plain sight. She knows her neighbors so well that her one-time fear is now trust.

Just through familiarity, your one-time fear of goods you have never tested has turned to trust too. Advertising has done that for you. It convinces you that since others believe, you also are safe in believing.

All products widely advertised are worthy of your faith. You buy from neighborly folk when you buy from their dealers.

Why not read the advertisements every day to become familiar with more advertised goods?

Every advertisement is a lesson in careful buying—read them all in The Gettysburg Times

The nation—once again—pays silent tribute to those of its departed defenders—the boys of '61, '98 and '17. So, on this Memorial Day, as we decorate their last resting places, let us give a thought to the noble ideals that prompted them to answer the call of their country. Theirs was a sacrifice without thought of personal gain, given with a sense of duty in defense of their fellow citizens. Noble, indeed, and inspiring to this and future generations.

And while we're remembering those who have gone, let us pay homage to those veterans who are still with us. As they pass on parade, let's give them a rousing cheer and show our appreciation for their past deeds with a "Well done, Boys—Well done!"

A Plain Girl

WHO MADE HERSELF THE RAGE OF NEW YORK

By Edna Wallace Hopper

Before me is my picture as a girl. Few girls would envy me my looks. But I made myself a famous beauy. And I've kept that beauty to a grand old age. I am still on the stage playing young girls' parts, and I still look a girl of 19.

I have helped many girls to careers of beauty. To many women I have brought decades of added youth. So I am convinced that millions can attain the benefits I got. I am going to help them do it Now I am placing at every woman's call the very helps which made me what I am.

White Youth Clay

I found my greatest help in clay. Not in the crude and muddy clays so many still employ. My Youth Clay, perfected by French experts, is white and clean and dainty. It is a superclay, based on 20 years of scientific study. No other clay that I know is nearly so efficient.

Youth Clay purges the skin of all that clogs or mars it. It brings that rosy afterglow which so amazes and delights. It firms the skin, combats all lines and wrinkles, reduces enlarged pores. Many users, in 30 minutes, seem to drop ten years.

No girl or woman who once see its results will ever go without it. The cost is 50c and $1.

My Youth Cream

My cold cream is another French creation. I call it my Youth Cream. It contains products both of lemon and strawberry. Also all the best that science knows to foster the fine texture of the skin. You have never known a cold cream to compare with this.

I apply it after my clay. Also as a night cream. Also daytimes as a powder base. It feeds, softens and protects. Youth Cream will delight you. It costs 60c.

I use a liquid cleansing cream, called my Facial Youth. A famous Parisian beauty first told me about it. Now the greatest beauty experts everywhere advise it, but they charge too high a price.

Facial Youth contains no animal, no vegetable fat. The skin cannot absorb it. So it cleans to the depths, then departs. All the dirt and grime and refuse come out with it. I have never found a method which cleans skins half so well. My Facial Youth costs 75c.

My Hair Youth

My hair is my greatest glory. It grows finer every year. Dndruff, falling hair or gray hair have never come to me. Nor to any friend who has employed my method.

These results are due to my Hair Youth. It is based on lifetimes of hair study. I apply it with an eye dropper, directly to the scalp. There it combats the hardened oil and dandruff which stifle the hair roots. It stimulates and fertilizes. Hair flourishes in such a well-kept scalp. No man or woman who sees what Hair Youth does will ever go without it. The cost is 50c and $1 with eye dropper.

All druggists and toilet counters now supply Edna Wallace Hopper's beauty helps. With each one comes my Beauty Book, also a guarantee. No one can do you a greater kindness than to urge you to employ them. Go learn how much they mean. Edna Wallace Hopper, 536 Lake Shore Drive, Chicago. —adv.

The Cost of Service to You

When you ask your Grocer to charge and deliver one or two very small items you are unconsciously adding to your own COST OF LIVING.

Your grocer's profits are very small and free automobile delivery service, while cheerfully given, is an added expense in the distribution of foods that YOU eventually pay for.

You can help the service grocer and YOURSELF by:

Ordering once a day only and preferably before 9 A. M.

Making each order as worthwhile as possible.

Paying in full once a week.

Help yourself by patronizing and co-operating with the service retailer whom you know and who usually owns property, pays taxes, banks and buys, himself in your town.

Ladino Clover Is New Forage Crop

Especially Adapted as Pasture for Rich Soils and Is Most Palatable.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Many inquiries have been received by the United States Department of Agriculture this spring regarding Ladino clover, a new forage crop that is being widely advertised for pasturage in the northern and western states. Because of the publicity being given the plant and the evident lack of information concerning it, the experience of the Department of Agriculture with the variety may be of interest.

Ladino clover is a large or "giant" form of the familiar little white or Dutch clover common in lawns and pastures. It is probably a native of northern Italy where, on the rich, moist soils in the valley of the Po river, it has long been a favorite forage crop. Under favorable conditions Ladino clover forms a dense mass of succulent herbage ten to twenty inches deep composed of large leaves borne on long stalks arising from creeping prostrate stems. With the exception of the seeds all parts of the plant are identical with those of common white clover except that they are much larger.

Adapted to Rich Soils.

Ladino clover is especially adapted as a pasture crop for rich, well watered soils in regions of moderate temperature. It does not ordinarily succeed on poor soils and it is particularly sensitive to lack of abundant and continuous moisture quite near the surface of the ground, consequently it should not be sown in localities where severe surface droughts are to be expected. It withstands extreme cold except on heavy clay soils not protected by a snow cover, in which case the plants are likely to heave badly in late winter. It was formerly believed that Ladino clover did not suffer from hot weather provided it was well supplied with water. Recent experience indicates, however, that the plants turn red under prolonged exposure to hot sunlight and the stand is weakened.

In the regions where it succeeds best Ladino clover is one of the most productive and nutritious pasture plants known and is unquestionably one of the most palatable to live stock. Repeated instances have been reported where a field of Ladino clover has carried the equivalent of from two to four head of mature stock per acre continuously from spring until fall. During this period the production of milk, meat or other animal products per acre has been greater than that from any other permanent grazing plant. The fondness of all kinds of live stock for Ladino clover has been illustrated many times by the animals leaving good fields of alfalfa, red clover or the grasses to feed on the Ladino. The palatability of Ladino, in fact, is sometimes disastrous since rabbits, gophers, grasshoppers and other pests sometimes feed on it so voraciously as to destroy it. Even live stock, and especially horses and sheep, sometimes destroy the stand by too close nibbling of the prostrate stems. There is a belief that Ladino clover does not cause bloating of cattle as badly as other leguminous pastures, but this is uncertain. So far as known, Ladino clover is not subject to serious injury by diseases and insects, except grasshoppers and other leaf-eaters.

Peculiar Characteristics.

While the peculiar characteristics of Ladino clover are not yet thoroughly understood, there are evidently certain sections in which it is excellently adapted, while for other localities it cannot as yet be advised. The most conspicuous success with Ladino has been had in the irrigated regions of southern Idaho and in the coastal regions of Oregon and Washington. In those districts the department feels warranted in advising its trial by all farmers interested in permanent pastures. The plant is also promising for irrigated districts in Colorado, Utah, northern California and eastern Oregon and Washington. It does not thrive in irrigated regions in the Southwest. Without irrigation Ladino has been a success in northern Michigan, on overflow land along the lower Missouri river, on the lower Mississippi and its tributaries and in scattered places throughout the central United States.

Ladino clover has been under more or less continuous test by the Department of Agriculture for nearly twenty years. Its progress has been retarded, however, by the fact that until recently it has been a very poor producer of seed. Within the past five years it has been found that the plant produces seed abundantly on irrigated soil in the Northwest and seed of excellent quality will probably now be available to supply all those who may care to use it.

Their Spirit Lives

In Flanders' fields where the poppies blow and in sacred ground of our own United States—they sleep. No longer do they face the trials of a turbulent world. Never again will they have to spring to arms at the sound of war's bugles. Their duty's done and—they're resting in peace.

And yet—THEIR SPIRIT LIVES! It always will live. Years can not blot out the memories they left for us as they sacrificed their all in order that we—who remain behind—might live in true Peace and Happiness. Theirs was truly, the giving of the full measure of devotion to their country. And on this great Memorial Day, let us give a silent prayer not only for those heroes of 1917 and '18 but likewise for the boys of '61 and '98 who have left this vale of tears but whose deeds will live on forever.
